

Fading Away

The sun rose from the east,
Just like yesterday.
I woke up from the same bed,
Just like every day.
Yet the innocent smile found back,
The way to the rightful owner.
And I knew I was going to be alright.
Without your trace of existence.
Then I saw you under the tree,
Laughing and smiling without me.
Surprisingly, it doesn't hurt anymore.
Just like us never existed.
And finally, you fading away from my sight,
Doesn't bother me anyway, anymore.